Catholics in Hong Kong and abroad walk fine line amid protests: Catholics in Hong Kong are right in the middle of pro-democracy protests. Some who spoke to NCR expressed concern that Pope Francis is not getting the full story of the ongoing situation.

Adorers help vulnerable women take back their dignity in Cape Verde: Sr. Milagros García has spent over three decades helping vulnerable women; for the last year, she has worked as director of a day center for sexually exploited women and others at risk of getting into dangerous or unethical work. As she tells GSR, "It's not just my work; it's my mission from God."

Geofencing at church is dead wrong: Did you catch Heidi Schlumpf's report about CatholicVote.org and its use of geofencing? Michael Sean Winters found the report frightening and the practice repugnant.

In an attempt to express sympathy for a friend, Nancy Linenkugel wrote in a card that her situation reminds Linenkugel of Sirach 2:5, " 'It is in fire that gold is tested.' ... And it's tough being gold."

In case you missed it, from NCR Bertelsen intern Sarah Salvatore: Mentors made the difference for first female and lay president of Loyola New Orleans.
