

News

Migration

Migrants seeking asylum in the United States walk into a temporary humanitarian respite center run by Catholic Charities of the Rio Grande Valley in McAllen, Texas, on April 8. (CNS/Reuters/Go Nakamura)

Rhina Guidos

View Author Profile

Catholic News Service

View Author Profile

Join the Conversation

July 29, 2021

Share on BlueskyShare on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

Texas Gov. Greg Abbott issued an order July 28 giving state police authority to stop and impound, if needed, any vehicles transporting migrants who crossed the border illegally.

He said the measure is to stop COVID-19 from spreading into the community. Some say such an order amounts to racial profiling.

The order came after a report that an immigrant family staying at a Catholic-run shelter went out to Whataburger, a fast-food place, in La Joya, Texas, and told a police officer who questioned them that they had tested positive for COVID-19.

Sr. Norma Pimentel, a member of the Missionaries of Jesus who is executive director of Catholic Charities of the Rio Grande Valley in Brownsville, Texas, tried to clarify what happened in a Facebook Live video July 29.

The family involved was quarantined at a hotel where the Catholic nonprofit had placed them after they were released by Border Patrol and tested positive for the virus.

Catholic Charities of the Rio Grande Valley in the Brownsville Diocese has a long history of helping migrants released from federal custody with food and shelter before they go to their final destinations in the United States.

Because of COVID-19, Pimentel said, families who have a member test positive are quarantined in a hotel. Though it's not a requirement that all members quarantine, some families just want to stay together. It's a practice Catholic Charities of the Rio Grande Valley put place since the pandemic.

Sr. Norma Pimentel, a member of the Missionaries of Jesus, along a border wall between Texas and Mexico in late February 2018. (CNS/Courtesy of the University of Notre Dame/Barbara Johnston)

The incident, she said, came about because "one of the families decided to go out of the [hotel] room and go buy a hamburger," but that doesn't mean that all of them do that, she said.

"What we're seeing today, this misinformation, that it's everybody, families are all over, exposing everybody to COVID, it's false. It's not true," she said in the Facebook Live interview conducted by the Diocese of Brownsville.

Brownsville Bishop Daniel Flores went on Twitter on July 28 after the order was announced to denounce the measure.

"Catholic Charities RGV assists families who are referred to us by Border Patrol, a federal entity. How can the Governor's order identify them as 'illegal' and how does looking for them not constitute racial profiling of persons legally in the US?" he tweeted.

Catholic Charities of the Rio Grande Valley usually buses migrants to their shelters and to hotels to quarantine. The order could greatly affect the charity's and other nonprofits' daily operations.

The Republican governor's order said that "no person, other than a federal, state, or local law-enforcement official, shall provide ground transportation to a group of migrants who have been detained by CBP [Customs and Border Protection] for crossing the border illegally or who would have been subject to expulsion under the Title 42 order."

Advertisement

The Title 42 order is a public health measure enacted by the Trump administration in March 2020 in an effort to keep migrants from crossing over U.S. borders, saying it is to protect people from the spread of COVID-19. The Biden administration has kept it in place, but some exceptions have been made, and it does not apply to minors.

The governor's order, referring to the incident involving the Catholic nonprofit, said "busloads of migrants, an unknown number of whom are infected with COVID-19, are being transported to communities across the State of Texas, exposing Texans to the spread of COVID-19, as has already been reported in cities like La Joya, among others."

But a statement from Pimentel released by Catholic Charities of the Rio Grande Valley said that "at no time" have COVID-positive immigrant families been walking around exposing others in the community.

"They are kept in isolation until they test negative," Pimentel said in the statement. "The La Joya incident is an isolated case, in a new location we had just begun to use. This one incident has caused a great deal of misinformation and unfortunately serious consequences."

She said in the statement the community can remain safe while others help "our guests who need our care with dignity and respect."

Referring to the governor's order, she said "any law or policy that contributes to human suffering is wrong and needs to be corrected."

"I urge state and local leaders to reconsider their actions and work with us and other community partners to help ensure that all individuals, whether long-term community members or newcomers fleeing violence are treated with dignity and that together we work to keep our community safe," she said.

A local report on valleycentral.com said authorities were called to the fast-food place after "someone waved down police alerting them that there was a family coughing, sneezing and not wearing masks, according to police."